DEDICATION

This book is the finalization of work begun by Berthold Laufer at the turn of the century. For a man of his passionate ambitions, one lifetime was not enough.

EDITOR'S NOTE

There are few major art museums which do not possess at least a small collection of Chinese rubbings. Usually they are kept in drawers or boxes — catalogues are not available. This is in strange contradiction to the actual use and value of rubbings. They are important source material for historians as they faithfully transmit historical inscriptions; for art historians as they reproduce more accurately the calligraphs (fa-t'ieh) of famous masters, reliefs, and paintings carved in stone than photography can do; and for historians of religion as they provide important information from churches, temples, mosques, and synagogues. For these reasons there are few books on Chinese art and history of Chinese culture which do not reproduce rubbings. They are original prints and make excellent illustrations owing to their high black-and-white contrast.

One of the largest and finest collections of rubbings in the western world is in the possession of Field Museum of Natural History. When I came to Chicago in the fall of 1973 to do research on Berthold Laufer, I became very much interested in this collection, largely made by him. At that time the catalogue project had been left in the hands of Alice Schneider, and it was she who convinced me to take over the editorial work. It meant more, though, than just seeing a book through the press. Only the file cards and the draft entries were ready. The material had to be arranged; introductions, indices, and bibliographic references had to be compiled; romanization, references, and entries had to be checked; and "duplicates" had to be eliminated. A strong effort was made to identify the foreign language inscriptions and to add references in languages other than Chinese.

As a large part of the work was done from my residence in Cologne and then Hamburg—without direct access to file cards and rubbings—it was not possible, except in a few of the doubtful cases, to examine the original rubbings to check datings, possible recuts, etc. Nevertheless, every effort has been made to achieve consistency. As the present catalogue is the first one of its kind in a western language, there will certainly be shortcomings. The editor will be very grateful for corrections and critical remarks.

It is a pleasant duty to thank Dr. James VanStone, Curator, and Dr. Bennet Bronson, Associate Curator, both of the Department of Anthropology, Field Museum of Natural History, for their strong support of the project. I also wish to thank Prof. M. Weiers, Bonn University, for identifying a Mongolian inscription and Dr. Dieter Schuh, Bonn, for identifying most of the Tibetan inscriptions. Christoph Höffken, Bonn, wrote the Chinese characters. For moral support I am most indebted to Prof. T. H. Tsien, Curator of the Far Eastern Library of the University of Chicago. I am grateful, too, to Pai Ch'i-ch'ü for her occasional assistance. The support of the German Research Association and the American Council of Learned Societies is gratefully acknowledged. This book would not exist, however, without the untiring efforts of Alice Schneider who actually wrote it.

The editor regrets that circumstances prevented him from profiting from the advice of two scholars closely connected with the project: Dr. Hoshien Tchen who did the research for the file cards and who retired in 1973 on his 80th birthday, and Dr. M. K. Starr, Director of the Milwaukee Public Museum, who initiated the catalogue many years ago and who is working on a monograph on Chinese rubbings. May this catalogue stimulate other museums and collections to publish information about their holdings of rubbings!

HARTMUT WALRAVENS

Hamburg, May 1977

PREFACE

Chinese ink rubbings are impressions on paper from low-relief or intaglio inscriptions and/or designs on stone (stele, pillars, cliffs, etc.), metal (bells, vessels, etc.), clay (pottery, brick, tile, clay sealing), bone, tortoise shells, and other hard materials. The production, use, and collection of rubbings have played a very significant part in the cultural pattern of China and some of her neighbors, especially Korea and Japan. In China particularly, with its strong historical tradition, rubbings have assumed an important role in the intellectual life of the country. Following the invention of paper by the Chinese some time around A.D. 100, and before the printing of books from wood blocks, presumably sometime in the seventh or eighth century, Confucian, Buddhist, and Taoist classic texts were inscribed on stone for permanency and, subsequently, rubbings of these texts were made for scholarly and religious use. Though it is quite likely that the practice of taking rubbings of these stone texts occurred earlier, the earliest extant Chinese rubbings date from somewhere in the years between A.D. 627 and 649.

In China the technique of making rubbings is considered quite special and is purely Chinese in origin. It has served as a type of camera for many centuries and is an ingenious and admirable one for it reproduces quite simply in full size every detail of the original surface. The technique is extremely useful and in no way damages the object being copied.

The value of rubbings is complex and extensive. As scholars have recognized, rubbings reflect the Chinese culture in its historical, artistic, and archaeological aspects. They provide historically authentic information when the existence of a written record on the subject is controversial or erroneous. In such a situation a rubbing can be the sole reliable source of information. For example, consider the tombstone inscription to Prince Lu (1618-1662). The tombstone text stated that Prince Lu died in the 11th lunar month of Yung-li 16th year (1662) at Chin-men Island. The cause of his death was given as asthma. But according to official records from San fan chi shi pen mo 三藩紀事本末 by Yang Lu-jung 楊陸榮 of Ch'ing dynasty, Prince Lu's death was attributed to drowning which was maneuvered by Cheng Ch'eng-kung 鄭成功 (1623-1662). On the other hand, the text of this tombstone inscription attributed Prince Lu's death to natural causes. Since it is known that Cheng Ch'eng-kung died six months before the death recorded on Prince Lu's tombstone, the allegation concerning Cheng Ch'eng-kung in the official record is completely false (see entry 1144).

Rubbings are valuable for the study of the etymology and the origin and development of Chinese characters, and of the evolution of the various styles of calligraphy from ancient script to the style still used in the present day. Rubbings are also useful in the study of the life and customs of Chinese philosophy, moral principles, and the beliefs and religious thoughts of the ancient Chinese. For example, the tomb-decoration stone reliefs of the Latter Han period (A.D. 2-220), the most famous of which are the rubbings of Wu Liang Tz'ü in Shantung Province, and the tomb relief materials found in Ssüch'uan Province demonstrate the various activities of the people in different occupations.

According to the traditional Chinese conception, the rubbings are valuable objects of literary and aesthetic interest from the educational point of view. Students can study them and collectors can admire them. In addition, the rubbings reveal the original object upon which the skilled craftsman carefully engraved the characters, pictures, and/or decorated motif. Each of the original objects can be an almost perfect piece, forming a harmonious co-operative effort between scholars, calligraphers, artists, and craftsmen. As one of the wonders of world religious art, the most important sculpture and inscription works are those cut in Rock Mountain in Lung-men at Lo-yang, Honan Province (dating A.D. 424-978). The original inscriptions from which the rubbings were made are masterpieces, prized world treasures.

The Chinese ink rubbings in the East Asian anthropological collection of Field Museum total almost 3,000 titles of subjects, comprising some 4,000 sheets or items. Most of these rubbings were collected by the late Dr. Berthold Laufer (1874-1934), former Chief Curator of the Department of Anthropology, but during my time in the Museum under Dr. Kenneth Starr's curatorship, the collection was enriched by some important additions, notably the rubbings taken from reliefs of the Han period (207 B.C. to A.D. 220 from Ssü-chuan province, a gift of the late Dr. David C. Graham. In addition, a number of new valuable acquisitions from Taiwan have enlarged the collection. At present, the Field Museum collection is most likely one of the largest and most comprehensive in the western world. Most are dated to the latter Ch'ing dynasty, but a few rare rubbings are dated to the Sung (960-1278) and Ming (1368-1644) periods. One of the rarest rubbings which I recommended for acquisition, is the precious collection of the "Fifty-second of 100 (re-cut stone) rubbings of Lan-t'ing hsü, written by Wang Hsi-chih (A.D. 321-379) from Yu Szu's collection of the Sung dynasty" (entry 814). This is a truly unique item. As noted in 1960 by the late Professor Li Tsung-t'ung 李宗侗 this Sung rubbing was owned successively by such famous collectors as Yu Szu 游似 (southern Sung dynasty), Prince Chin 晉王 (Ming dynasty), Prince Ch'eng 成親王 (Yung-hsing 永理 1752-1823), and Ch'en Chieh-Ch'i 陳介祺 (1813-1884). The rubbings show a great number of seals and colophons of well-known collectors and scholars from Sung to Ch'ing dynasties, indicating their critical comments and enjoyment of the items. The best notes were handwritten by Weng Fang-kang 翁方綱 (1799-1873) and by Ho Shao-chi 何紹基 (1733-1873), both outstanding calligraphers and scholars of the Ch'ing dynasty.

The rubbings in the Field Museum collection can be divided broadly into two categories: one group is derived from the pei 碑 and the other from the t'ieh 帖. The pei is a large stone stele on which appeared the inscription or design. Originally it was used for the record of an important event or a tombstone remembrance, but subsequently the stele cut was expanded and used for every memorial event. Even the Confucian classics were cut on stone, as well as the Buddhist classics and votive inscriptions, official records, etc. However, in this category, usually the inscriptions are models of the literary composition as well as of calligraphy. However, the author of the text and the calligrapher are not necessarily the same person.

The t'ieh is cut on the stone slabs or on woodblocks from facsimilies of model calligraphy. It was used for copy practice by students or collected by admirers. In this category, usually the text is composed and written by the calligrapher in the form of a letter, poem, or note. The important point is that the engraved stone slabs or wood blocks are permanently preserved for admirers and students of calligraphy. These are the so-called fa-t'ieh, or examples of calligraphy. The Museum possesses a large collection of fa-t'ieh of fine quality from the Sung to Ch'ing dynasties.

The Museum's large collection of Chinese ink rubbings is well selected and demonstrates the collector's great interest in their value. In this regard I must pay highest homage to Dr. Laufer, a great Sinologue whose knowledge of Chinese culture is exceptionally remarkable. The subjects of the collection are varied, numerous, and complex and refer to the historical, philosophical, geographical, political, militaristic, racial, economical, cultural, literary, artistic, biographical, mythological, legendary, and religious phases of Chinese history. The languages on the rubbings include Chinese, Manchu, Mongolian, Tibetan, Arabic, Sanskrit, Latin, Tangut, and Japanese.

The dates of the original objects from which rubbings were taken range from the pre-Christian to the present century. These include, for example, the set of stone drums inscription, traditionally dated 827-781 B.C. (entry 77); the Ch'ün-ch'en shang shou k'o-shih 羣臣上壽刻石 dated 158 B.C. (entries 82 and 208); the Ch'in T'ai-shan ts'an-tzu 秦泰山殘字 dated 209 B.C. (see entry 82); and the recent inscriptions such as Wu-wang tsai Chü 毋忘在莒 dated 1952 (entry 1992), and Shih-men shui-k'u chi-nien pei 石門水庫紀念碑 dated 1964 (entry 1993), which refers to the completion of the Shih-men Reservoir project in Taiwan.

In regard to the area represented, the rubbings reflect most of the provinces of China. Those from Shantung Province include a number of rubbings taken from the Han stone in the Confucius Temple at Ch'ü-fu and at Chi-ning Chou; a complete set of rubbings referring to Wu Liang offering shrine, from Han stone at Chia-hsiang hsien; and several beautiful rubbings from the Han shrine at Hsiao-t'ang shan. Those from the Ssüch'uan province include a great number of rubbings taken from the tomb relief of the Han period (207 B.C.-A.D. 220). Outstanding among them is a series which gives an unusually fine representation of the typical regional culture of this area in west China, and is of particular cultural and aesthetic significance.

From the Shensi Province, the Museum possesses a great collection of rubbings from stone stelae assembled in the famous Pei-lin 碑林, a forest of stone tablets located at the Confucius Temple in the historically important city of Hsi-an. The Pei-lin is a real museum of stone stelae that was established in the Yüan-yü reign (1086-1093) of Sung dynasty. The innumerable stone stelae, dated from ancient time and most from the T'ang (618-907) to Ch'ing dynasties, bear the inscriptions of model calligraphy as well as literary compositions. Stones of historical importance, such as the Confucian classics, Nestorian inscription, dated A.D. 781 (entry 694), Hua-i t'u 華夷圖 dated 1137 (entry 820), Yü chi t'u 禹蹟圖, dated 1137 (entry 821), and Ch'un-hua pi ko fa-t'ieh 淳化秘閣法帖, recut stone dated 1646 (entries 1324-1431) are also found here.

Further, the Museum possesses a rich collection of rubbings with Buddhist inscriptions from most provinces of China. Particularly notable from the stones of Peking are those translated into Chinese at Hsi-yü Temple 西域寺 (entry 491) and in Sanskrit and Tibetan at Wu-t'a Temple 五塔寺 (entry 57). Other important inscriptions are from the Lamaist Temples in Peking and Jehol (entries 1612-1671).

Rubbings of Buddhist sculpture and inscriptions found in Lung-men, at Lo-yang, Honan Province, dating A.D. 424-907 are also represented. These are well known throughout the world, for they reflect the great Buddhist influence in China.

A large number of important rubbings are taken from stone inscriptions concerning Taoism, especially from the Pai-yün-kuan 白雲觀 (Taoist monastery in Peking), dating from Ming (1368-1644) and Ch'ing (1644-1911) dynasties, as well as those from Chung-nan shan 終南山 in Chou-chi district 藍田縣, Shensi Province.

Also represented are rubbings with Islamic inscriptions which are written in Chinese and Arabic, from the original stones found in Peking, and in Shensi, Honan, and Kuangtung Provinces dating back to the T'ang Dynasty (618-907), when Islam first entered China, and through the Ch'ing Dynasty (1644-1911).

Included in the collection are rubbings taken from Judaic stone inscriptions from K'ai-feng, Honan Province, dated 1489, 1512, and 1679.

More than 100 rubbings from Peking contain Roman Catholic inscriptions, including grave tablet inscriptions erected to Catholic priests buried in Peking. These inscriptions, which were cut in matching Latin and Chinese, are valuable for the study of cultural exchange between Europe and China during the late Ming (1368-1643) and the Ch'ing (1644-1911) dynasties (entries 1146-1236).

I was appointed Technical Advisor to the Field Museum Library in 1954. My responsibilities involved the preparation of a preliminary catalogue of the East Asian collection of books in Oriental languages, especially the ones in Chinese. The project was initiated by Dr. M. Kenneth Starr, former Curator, Asiatic Archaeology and Ethnology. While working on this project, I discovered an extensive and valuable collection of fine Chinese ink rubbings in the storage room of the Department of Anthropology, where they were dispersed and neglected.

At the end of the year 1958, when I became Consultant on East Asian Collections of the Department of Anthropology at the Museum, I was assigned to assist Dr. Starr on the preparation of a rubbings catalogue. The primordial work of cataloging rubbings included orderly assembling, disinfection, numbering, repairing, and cleaning. In fact, the real catalogue work was not started until 1961. The preliminary work, however, was essential. My responsibility involved filling out the rubbings catalogue data on a large card, which provides the following information: 1) provenience of object, 2) date, 3) type, 4) subject, 5) language, 6) title, 7) the name of the author's statement, 8) description of content, 9) name of calligrapher, 10) style of calligraphy, 11) description of design, 12) names of artist and engraver, 13) characteristics of rubbing (under this category also (a.) date of edition, (b.) supplemental data), 14) catalogue number, 15) form of rubbing, 16) dimensions of rubbing, 17) published information on object or rubbing, and other data.

This highly specialized work involved extensive and diverse research. On each catalogue card is written the title of the object, transliteration (the Wade-Giles system of romanization has been generally followed), original title in Chinese, translation of the title in English, summary of the contents of the inscription, identification of the pictorial elements, and the courtesy name (字), literary name (hao 號), alternative names, and official name (ming 名) of the author. It was necessary to record the author's official name on the catalogue for reference, and to indicate the years of birth and death, if possible.

Many original objects often date back to more than 1,000 years with re-cut stone (copies) erected in successive dynasties. As a result, there are often different dates as well as places. Thus the study of the original object, the date and name of the engraver are necessary for proper identification. Finally, a card is appended with the description and identification of bibliographic references to books in Oriental and western languages.

The basic purpose of the Chinese rubbings cataloging project is to bring the information to the public. Understandably, the project has encountered special problems. It required teamwork more than individual effort. Despite the shortage of many reference books related to rubbings, the project was completed in 1972, according to plan. This project, I believe, is the first extensive catalogue on Chinese ink rubbings written in the English language. It provides an opportunity for the public to appreciate this rich collection and offers a research tool for scholars and students in Chinese studies.

I am deeply grateful to my dear friend, Prof. Tsuen-hsiun Tsien for his continuous interest in the East Asian Collection of the Museum. He aided me with great enthusiasm from the beginning of this project to its completion, and gave unstintingly of his time. His counseling was invaluable.

I wish to pay high regards to Dr. Starr, who conceived the rubbings project and provided excellent support and encouragement.

In 1965 I began receiving the valuable volunteer assistance of Alice K. Schneider, who edited and typed the catalogue cards and filed the entire collection of delicate rubbings. In the middle of 1972 when I concentrated my efforts to accelerate the completion of the project, my wife, Chao Lin-Sie, offered her help as a volunteer to assist me. She carefully checked the details on each of the final cards. I am grateful to her for her efforts.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Having had the honor of receiving so many scholarly writings for this catalogue, it is only left for me to show my appreciation to those persons who contributed so much:

To Peter J. Gayford, Zelda Hauser, Zofia Jastrzebska, David Keene, Henry Moy, Janet Musikantow, Robert Osborne, Chao Linsie Tchen, and Paulette Landis, all of who either assisted me with the entries or indices — my heartfelt thanks.

To T. H. Tsien for his continued encouragement.

To E. Leland Webber and James VanStone for placing their confidence in this unprecedented undertaking.

To Bennet Bronson for acquiring the generous grant given the project by the National Endowments for the Arts, and to the N.E.A. for that generosity.

To Tseng Y. H. Ecke and Dr. Lothar Ledderose for their illuminating introductions, and again to Mrs. Ecke for lending her calligraphic talents to our title page.

To Herta Newton who took most of the plates, patiently working with me and the Field Museum collection of unruly rubbings for well over a year. Without Herta this number of illustrations would never have been achieved. And to John Bayalis, Ron Testa, Solomon Gurewitz, James H. Swartchild, Albert Shatzel, and William Lange who also contributed photographic skills.

Without the gifts of all these wonderful people, the task of assembling this catalogue would have been impossible.

The project would have also personally faltered many times without the spiritual sustenance supplied by family members and friends — my daughter, Jeanne Schneider McKinney, my sister, Bernice Gregg, and friends, Donald Collier, Helen Chandra, Ilza Veith, and, most unselfishly, Harrie Vanderstappan whose far-reaching kindnesses helped one more shaky pilgrim through.

Finally, I welcome the opportunity to express my gratitude for the scholarly abilities of our editor, Dr. Hartmut Walravens, whose excellent contributions made this book serviceable, and whose perseverance surpassed even mine.

Appreciation is also extended to Bennet Bronson, Katharine Lee, and Peter J. Gayford for helping to proofread and to Patricia Williams and Tanisse Bushman, successive Managing Editors of Scientific Publications at Field Museum, for their patient co-operation.

Altogether, it took Dr. Hoshien Tchen and me seven years to research, translate, edit, and type well over 2,000 file cards, a project formulated by Dr. M. Kenneth Starr, former Curator, East Asiatic Archaeology and Ethnology. Our joint work benefitted from a previous catalogue compiled by Rose G. Miller and C. Y. Hu between 1939 and 1944. Their efforts, in turn, had relied heavily upon the fastidious field notes made by Dr. Berthold Laufer in his personal catalogue. Because of this foundation, it was possible for me to render the detailed file cards into the present entries in one year of full-time work. One year later, several of us had compiled the extremely complicated indices; an additional year of editing gave us the time to photograph the plates.

This has been a project of many challenges, each in turn seeming to diminish the previous one. The interpretations of the extremely delicate translations of a vast array of subjects have been of particular concern to me. English equivalents for Chinese terms are not a matter of flipping through a dictionary, and during a period of 2,000 years they invited misinterpretations by later Chinese editors. The following pages, therefore, are not attempts at scholarly persuasion, but rather presentation of data gleaned to the extent of our combined abilities. No one knows better than the authors and editor of a manuscript its inherent weaknesses and human errors, and that even while this material goes to press, new information is being pursued and new facts revealed.

THE IMPORTANCE OF INK-IMPRINTS

In China, Chin-shih-hsüeh 金石學 (studies of metal and stone engravings) is a special branch of formal study which began in the Northern Sung in the eleventh century. The term chin-wen 金文 (metal inscription) primarily refers to the inscriptions on bronze ritual vessels. Through archaeological discoveries in the twentieth century and the wider interest of international scholars, studies on bronze inscriptions, as well as on chia-ku-wen 甲骨文 (divination inscriptions from oracle bone and shell), have advanced substantially. Chinese scholarship on stone engravings was extensive during the classical period and, while a large amount of literary and epigraphic material from this period survives, during the twentieth century research on this subject has been scarce.

The earliest stone monuments found in China are round boulders called chieh 石碣. A few of this type without inscriptions are still standing, and it has been claimed that dates of these monuments go back as far as the legendary kings of Shun and Yu in the third millennium B.C.¹ During the late Chou period, when production of ritual bronze vessels with inscriptions declined, inscribed stones began to appear.

The first group of inscribed stone monuments known to us is the set of 10 stone drums (entry 77) dated eighth century B.C. Following these, the Ch'in dynasty (221-207 B.C.) marked the beginning of the inscribed stelae, perpetual memorial monuments called pei 碑. These are large rectangular stones standing upright like poster columns with flattened front and back for inscriptions. During the Ch'in empire such commemorative stelae were erected in honor of the emperor and were located at famous mountain sites visited by him. On the stelae were inscribed the newly mandated official script, small-seal, written by his loyal ministers (entry no. 78).

In the Han period (206 B.C.-A.D. 220) stone monuments had a wider purpose and took various forms. By the later Han, the production of stelae increased greatly. They were dedicated to Confucianism and its ceremonial rites, and commemorated important national events and other ritual functions. There were also stelae in honor posthumously of noted individuals; these generally had a long epigraph or obituary in memory of the person deceased. Although very few signed stelae appear from this period, the quality of the literary content, the handsome calligraphy, and the excellence of the engravings show that Han stelae were made by outstanding artists.

Later, between the fourth and ninth centuries, when smaller tombstones were preferred, writers and artists began to sign their names on the engraved stones. At about the same time, from the fifth century onward, Buddhism spread widely in China and comfortably adopted the custom of engraving on stelae.

Of utmost importance in the history of ink-imprints was the improved quality and quantity of paper in the Later Han (A.D. 25-220). It was then realized that paper could be used to make reproductions from the engravings.

Ink-imprints (t'o-pen 拓本) are commonly called rubbings or ink-squeezes. Because this is a duplicating technique on stone, it may be considered a prototype of lithography. In China it is referred to as mo-t'a 摹搨 (copy by tapping). Instead of the stone being pressed on paper, however, the reverse is done — the paper is pressed on the stone. The traditional Chinese method is to moisten lightly a sheet of paper made from the cortex of the mulberry tree, or from bamboo pulp. This is a tissue-thin paper that is strong and highly absorbant. The moistened paper is then spread over the surface of the engraved object and gently forced into all the incised areas with a broad brush. A flat pad, generally made of loosely woven cloth with a piece of cotton tied inside, is then soaked with just the right amount of black ink and evenly tapped all over the paper. The higher surface which the pad has touched turns black while the incised part remains white. When the ink is dry, the paper is peeled off, giving a positive impression. This is called the wet-method.

The process of stone engraving, especially in the case of model-writing (fa-t'ieh 法帖), is a fastidious craft. The valuable original handwriting must be copied by an expert. The trace-copies of the T'ang and Sung periods were made under imperial patronage and by the master calligraphers of the time. The stone engravings that resulted from the work of these calligraphers are among the finest in existence, as they are specimens chosen specifically as models for students of the art.

For making the engraving itself, the trace-copies were written in black or vermillion-red ink (shu-tan 書丹). After pasting the trace-copy on the stone or wood, the engraver would cut through the trace-copy into the surface of the material, striving to achieve the greatest possible accuracy. Very often, every participant in the process — the person who copied the work, the skilled engraver, and the conscientious supervisor — signed his name alongside that of the original artist.

Under the Han Emperor Ling, the minister Ts'ai Yung proposed that an official edition of the Seven Confucian Classics be engraved on stone. The intention was to rectify erroneous transmissions which had crept into the many hand copies of these classics. Twenty stelae were therefore completed under imperial sponsorship between A.D. 175 and 185, and 48 more stelae were carved under the Wei regime of the Three Kingdoms period from A.D. 240 to 248.

This may have promoted the use of ink-imprints for scholarly reproductions, for we know as a fact that artists such as Wang Hsi-chih (A.D. 303-379) and Ku K'ai-chih (ca. A.D. 334-406) were skilled at copying and had traced the works of older masters for stone engravings. This skill not only encouraged the process of print-making (which in turn made possible the preservation of handsome calligraphy and pictorial art), but it also served as a means of education. Eventually, it inspired wood engravings and led to the invention of movable type. The development of paper and printing were important contributions to world civilizations.

Since the T'ang and Sung periods, Chinese stone engravings have been held in great esteem. As the earlier engraved stones were lost or badly damaged, new stones were carved from the ink-imprints; famous works were copied many times over. Dealing with the many editions became a realm of specialized knowledge. Early ink-imprints were regarded as highly as manuscripts by connoisseurs. Old imprints from T'ang and Sung stones became precious rarities. Metal and stone engravings, calligraphy, and painting (chin-shih- shu-hua 金石書畫) had become a united quartet. To the artists of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, these media formed a single body of visual art study.

Now, with the publication of this catalogue, Field Museum will become a major center in the United States for the study of Chinese ink-imprints, as today these again are recognized as valuable tools for research into Chinese historical documents, literature, and art.

RUBBINGS IN ART HISTORY

There are two basic types of rubbings in the history of Chinese calligraphy, those taken from a stele, pei, and those taken from an engraving of a t'ieh. The word pei refers to monumental stone stelae erected above ground and usually free standing, and in a broad sense to all writings engraved on stone. Inscriptions were engraved on pei long before the rubbing technique was devised, and pei continued to be erected throughout China's long history for purposes other than making rubbings.

The original meaning of the word t'ieh is label, note, or small paper sheet. In calligraphy the term denotes primarily handwritten pieces of informal content and of relatively small format, written by a famous calligrapher in ink on paper or silk. Engravings of t'ieh were made solely for the purpose of taking rubbings and thus reproducing unique examples of handwriting. Understanding the difference between pei and t'ieh is important in the understanding of the significance of rubbings in art history.

Pei

The earliest known examples of pei are the tablets that were erected between 219-210 B.C. by Ch'in Shih-huang-ti (r. 221-210 B.C.) to commemorate his unification of the empire. The calligraphers of the pei usually remained anonymous. It was only in the second half of the second century that some stelae began to be signed. Epigraphic types of script such as chuan shu, li shu, or k'ai shu (cheng shu) were most often used; only in exceptional cases does one find the cursive type hsing shu. The texts of these stelae commemorated political events or personages of historical importance, and thus always possessed a certain public character. Each stele is known by a name which generally contains the honorific name of the person whose deeds are commemorated and the location where the stele was erected. Often a stele has two titles — a pei-o above in very large characters, and a shou-t'i to the right of the text.

The earliest rubbings from pei are older than those taken from recuts of t'ieh. Perhaps the first stelae from which rubbings were made were the Stone Classics (Shih-ching). They were erected between A.D. 175-185 for the purpose of standardizing and preserving the Confucian Classics. Since paper had been developed around A.D. 100, rubbings would have been the easiest and most efficient way to promulgate the texts. There is no clear proof that this happened, but there is reference to the fact that in A.D. 143 paper had already become a popular and inexpensive material for writing.¹ By the T'ang period (618-807), the use of rubbings was widespread. An example is the "Inscription for the Hot Spring" (Wen-ch'üan ming), written by Emperor T'ang T'ai-tsung (r. 626-649). The rubbing was found in the caves of Tun-huang in Central Asia.²

It was a milestone in the history of calligraphy when during the period of the Six Dynasties (220-588) the interest of calligraphers shifted from pei to t'ieh. The great works of calligraphy of the Han dynasty (206 B.C.-A.D. 220) had all been stone inscriptions, but now t'ieh for the first time became the representative masterworks of the period. The new genre of calligraphy was developed to classical perfection by masters of the Eastern Chin dynasty (A.D. 317-420), especially Wang Hsi-chih (307-365?), and his son, Wang Hsien-chih (A.D. 344-388). Known as the Two Wangs they became the paragons of all Chinese calligraphers and their handwritten pieces set stylistic and aesthetic standards for centuries to come.

The shift of interest from pei to t'ieh, however, did not mean that great calligraphers immediately stopped writing large stone inscriptions. Especially during the T'ang dynasty, major masters, such as Ou-yang Hsün (557-641), Yü Shih-nan (558-638), Ch'u Sui-liang (596-658), and Yen Chen-ch'ing (709-785), still worked in this genre. The masters of subsequent dynasties, however, concentrated almost exclusively on t'ieh. Direct stone inscriptions from the hand of famous calligraphers became rare. Nevertheless, stelae continued to be erected and the writings engraved on them were distributed in the form of rubbings. Yet it was generally not the calligraphy that brought these rubbings attention, but, rather, the commemorative subjects which were considered to be of value for various historical, political, and religious reasons.

The rubbings taken from such stelae generally were on huge paper sheets. These sheets were often cut into a more usable size and mounted in album form. The older a rubbing, the more valuable it was because it preserved the crispness and precision of the original cuttings which time gradually eroded. Often the stones were not protected from the elements and deteriorated. Many stones were damaged and extensive taking of rubbings precipitated the process of decay. Old rubbings thus gave a better and more complete picture of the engraved text than it was possible to obtain at a later date from the stele itself.

In the eighteenth century the attitude toward stone inscriptions changed radically. Intensive archaeological and epigraphical studies spurred a new interest in the very style of the writing itself. This, in turn, had a decisive influence on calligraphic practice and led to a major revival movement of old styles. Special attention was given to those stelae that had been written in the northern part of China between the third and sixth centuries A.D. — exactly the period when the art of the t'ieh rose in the south.

Because of the political and cultural division in China during this period, the style of the northern stone inscriptions had developed independently from those in the south. In the opinions of calligraphers and theoreticians of the new movement in the eighteenth century, the stelae of the north offered an artistic alternative to the Wang Hsi-chih tradition. Not only did they discover in these inscriptions an aesthetic value that had largely gone unnoticed so far, they also claimed that the style of the stone inscriptions was more authentic than the style of the Chin masters' tradition which had been modified in the process of constant copying. The late Ch'ing dynasty masters called their own movement pei-hsüeh (school based on stelae) and contrasted it with what they labelled t'ieh-hsüeh (school based on t'ieh).

T'ieh

T'ieh are not as old as pei. The earliest examples date only from the Chin dynasty (A.D. 265-420), although it is known from literary sources that they existed before that time, and that they were appreciated as works of calligraphy as early as the first century A.D. T'ieh are mostly letters or personal notes, written with brush and ink on paper or silk, and therefore informal types of script, such as hsing-shu and ts'ao-shu, were generally used. T'ieh are not interesting primarily for their text, but because they were written by famous calligraphers. In order to identify these pieces, two characters were usually taken out of context from the beginning line and used as a name.

The earliest t'ieh from which stone-cuts were made, were hand-writings of Wang Hsi-chih. The second T'ang emperor, T'ai-tsung, who played a decisive role in the promulgation of the Wang tradition, had Wang Hsi-chih's magnum opus, the Lan-t'ing hsü (entry 814), cut in stone. He also distributed the Shih-ch'i t'ieh, a collection of Wang's ts'ao-shu pieces to the "Institute for the Propaganda of Culture" (Hung-wen kuan), where young aristocrats of the metropolis studied the art of calligraphy.

The subsequent history of this type of rubbings is also closely related to the development of the Wang tradition. One of the most influential recuts of the T'ang dynasty was the Ta-T'ang San-tsang sheng-chiao hsü (Preface to the Holy Teachings of Hsüan-tsang San-tsang from the Great T'ang Dynasty) (entries 624, 871), better known as Chi-Wang sheng-chiao hsü (Preface to the Holy Teachings compiled from Characters Written by Wang Hsi-chih. The text of this piece had been composed by T'ang T'ai-tsung in 648 as a eulogy to the works of the great monk and pilgrim Hsüan tsang (ca. 596-664). By order of the third T'ang emperor Kao-tsung (r. 649-683), the monk Huai-jen, who was a distant descendant of Wang Hsi-chih, copied each character in the text from one of the many works by Wang Hsi-chih in the imperial collection. The entire copy then looked as if it were based on an original work in Wang Hsi-chih's own hand. In 672 Huai-jen's work was cut into stone, and this stele remains today in the Forest of Stelae (Pei-lin) in Sian.³ Although it was not written by Wang Hsi-chih himself, the Chi-Wang sheng-chiao hsü became one of the most influential works of the Wang tradition. Not only was it one of the first t'ieh to be cut into stone, but it was also the longest piece of Wang Hsi-chih's "hand-writing." It consisted of 1,904 characters, many of which are not found in the Lan-t'ing hsü and other famous pieces. To a student of Wang Hsi-chih's style, the Chi-Wang sheng-chiao hsü offered the greatest repertoire of forms.

Rubbings of the T'ang dynasty were primarily taken from one example of calligraphy. In the tenth century, however, a new type of rubbing gained prevalence: works of various masters were engraved into a series of stones, and rubbings from them were then mounted together in albums, often consisting of several volumes. Such collections were first compiled in the Southern T'ang dynasty (937-976), but not much is known about these early compendia and perhaps no rubbings have survived.

The epoch-making undertaking in this genre was the compilation of the Ch'un-hua Pi-ko t'ieh (entries 1324-1431) under the imperial patronage of Sung T'ai-tsung in 992. Named after a pavilion in the imperial palace, the Ch'un-hua Pi-ko t'ieh was the most comprehensive collection of rubbings made thus far. Following the example of T'ang T'ai-tsung, Sung T'ai-tsung also favored the Wang tradition. Half of the collection's 10 volumes contain works of the Two Wangs. Rubbings from the Ch'un-hua Pi-ko t'ieh and recuts made of it were circulated widely and their influence on the practice and history of calligraphy was profound.

The early collections of rubbings were, as far as we know, all produced under imperial patronage. By the eleventh century, however, stone-cuts were also manufactured on private initiative. Through the writings of Mi Fu (1052-1107), for example, we know that it was quite common practice among collectors of his time to have precious works of calligraphy from their collections cut into stone. Mi himself also had such stone-cuts made of three Chin masters' works in his possession, which he treasured most.

In later times the size of these privately sponsored rubbing collections grew and some of the Ming dynasty compendia rival the Ch'un-hua Pi-ko t'ieh in scope and quality. Among them are editions that were supervised by such eminent connoisseurs as Wen Cheng-ming (1470-1559) (the T'ing-yün kuan fa-t'ieh) and Tung Ch'i-ch'ang (1555-1636) (the Hsi-hung t'ang fa-t'ieh). In the Ch'ing dynasty one finds again many privately edited rubbing collections and also the last great imperial compendium, the San-hsi t'ang fa-t'ieh, which was produced under the auspices of the Ch'ien-lung emperor (r. 1736-1795).

Some of the rubbing collections that appeared after the Ch'un-hua Pi-ko t'ieh consisted largely of recuts of parts of this great compilation, but often the subsequent collections included additional works by later masters whose calligraphy grew to be accepted and appreciated as stylistic models. One such example is the "Four Great Masters of the Sung Dynasty.”⁴ One also finds specialized collections that are devoted to a single master, a certain geographical region, or a certain period of time.

Although most of the rubbing compendia contained some works that were hard to find elsewhere, their content differed less than might be expected. They mainly reproduced samples from the canon of works that had come to be regarded as classical models, and among which the pieces by Wang Hsi-chih were the most numerous. The value of a rubbing collection thus was not primarily judged by its content but by the reliability of the particular versions that had been chosen to be recut and by the technical quality of the recut itself.

Even in the earliest collections one finds that comments on the various pieces written by later connoisseurs, official titles of the calligrapher, and the name of the t'ieh were also cut into stone. In the course of time these secondary parts became longer and more elaborate. In later collections a famous piece is often preceded and followed by colophons, and sometimes copies done by later calligraphers are also included. Often the collectors' seals are cut into stone as well. This illustrates the increasing tendency toward intellectualization and sophistication in the practice and appreciation of Chinese calligraphy.

The major function of collections of rubbings was to serve as models for would-be calligraphers. Because most of the classical prototypes had been lost in the course of time and because only a few individuals had access to the collections where the remaining originals and good handwritten copies were kept, rubbings became the most common source of knowledge regarding early masterpieces. Such rubbings were used by everyone who studied calligraphy, and that meant every member of the educated elite. As these compendia contained pieces by different masters, the student had two choices: he could select one master (or even one piece) as his model or he could copy many different masters' styles and eventually synthesize them into a style of his own. Developing an individual style, of course, was what every calligrapher with artistic ambition strove for in accord with the age-old aesthetic demand that an artist, albeit staying within the boundaries of the tradition, still must transcend his models.

⁴They are Ts'ai Hsiang (1012-1067), Su Shih (1037-1101), Huang T'ing-chien (1045-1105), and Mi Fu (1052-1107).

Since rubbings were the most influential device in the transmission of the styles of famous calligraphic works, the question of how accurately they preserved the appearance of the original handwriting is crucial. It cannot be denied that a well-executed stone-cut renders the shapes of the brush strokes amazingly well. It is fascinating to observe the meticulous skill that is evident in fine incisions. Even irregular blank spots within a stroke and erratic traces of single hairs can be transferred onto the stone. (See illus. 747.)

In spite of the technical virtuosity that could be attained, however, rubbings often do not represent the original as faithfully as would ideally be possible because many of the stone-cuts were not based upon the original writing, but upon handwritten copies of early rubbings. The original classical masterworks all but disappeared long ago. For example, there is no authentic sample of the handwriting of the Two Wangs extant today. The early rubbings have also perished, as did the stones from which they were taken. Save for a few exceptions, such as that found at Tun-huang, the earliest rubbings today date from the Sung dynasty and these are also quite rare (entries 270, 578, 661, 814). Moreover, most often the works that served as the basis for stone-cuts are not known and their authenticity can therefore not be verified. Even the reliability of the early Ch'un-hua Pi-ko t'ieh was seriously challenged soon after its appearance. Mi Fu and Su Shih, among others, criticized the selection of pieces in this most influential of all compendia, charging that it included many errors and even falsifications.

The chain of copying could not help but produce modifications. If one compares different rubbing versions of the same piece, one will always find smaller or greater stylistic differences between them, but the exact style of the prototype can no longer be ascertained. This is the point where the pei-hsüeh of the eighteenth century claimed superiority. Because it used rubbings from stone stelae that were still extant at the time, there was no question about authenticity of style. This is not the place to investigate the arguments concerning the pei-hsüeh, which were a major topic of discussion in calligraphy criticism of the nineteenth and the twentieth centuries, but attention should still be drawn to one fact: although the pei-hsüeh rightly pointed out that in the process of transmission of the t'ieh their styles had constantly been changed, it must be acknowledged that it was these very modifications which offered the possibility for continuous new stylistic explorations and developments through the centuries.

The connoisseurship of rubbings is one of the most complicated fields in the study of Chinese art. Traditional Chinese connoisseurs have devoted much effort to this problem and made detailed comparative studies of rubbings that were taken from the same stone at different times, thereby allowing them to trace the process of deterioration. However, difficulties remain. For example, it can be very tricky to differentiate between those rubbings taken from the same stone at different times and rubbings taken from a good recut of this stone. Furthermore, the stylistic differences that exist between several versions of one prototype are of little help in the dating of these versions because the very purpose of manufacturing a stone-cut is to preserve the appearance of the model in a form that remained unaffected by the change of time. Stylistic differences, therefore, have little artistic significance. If one has to determine the age of a particular rubbing, say, Wang Hsi-chih's Lan-t'ing hsü, one is likely to rely mainly on such criteria of traditional connoisseurship as the color of the ink, the quality of the paper, and the impression of the collectors' seals, rather than on the style of the handwriting itself.

Rubbings were also used in fields other than calligraphy. Following the example of stone-cuts of famous t'ieh, noted paintings were also reproduced in this way. This, however, was a very late development and its art historical importance is in no way comparable to the crucial role which rubbings played in the history of calligraphy. Because it is difficult to render greyish tones and ink washes in a rubbing, those paintings with calligraphic qualities, such as bamboo and plum paintings, were most successfully cut into stone. A work which deserves special mention is "Mr. Chou's Painting Forest" (Chou-shih hui-lin), which was published between 1580-1589. It contains reproductions of paintings from the tenth to the thirteenth centuries, and thus is a forerunner of woodblock copybooks like the famous "Mustard Seed Garden" of the seventeenth century.

Another late application of the rubbing technique was made in the field of archaeology. Rubbings proved especially useful in the study of the bronze vessels of antiquity because they could clearly reproduce the inscriptions often found at not easily seen places, such as the inside of a vessel or the underside of vessel handles. Rubbings also could be effectively used to reproduce the relief ornamentation on the outside of such vessels. At least since the eleventh century large stone reliefs from Han dynasty tombs have been reproduced and made known through rubbings. Indeed, it is in the service of archaeological studies that the technique of taking rubbings still plays an important role today, be it in the reproduction of the characters on oracle bones, or the intricate patterns of bronze décor, or of the inscriptions and incised decorations on Buddhist stelae. In all these and in many other instances, rubbings can reproduce the design more clearly than is possible with photography. However, photographic reproduction has almost entirely replaced rubbings as copy books for calligraphers. The chain of constant recuts has therefore nearly come to an end. Still it is this very technique of photography which today makes available to everybody the immense wealth of information that a great collection of rubbings such as the present one represents.

BERTHOLD LAUFER AND HIS RUBBINGS COLLECTION

Field Museum of Natural History possesses a collection of approximately 4,000 rubbings, most of which were brought together by the well-known Oriental scholar, Berthold Laufer¹ (1874-1934), who headed the Museum's Department of Anthropology from 1915 to 1934. From 1901 to 1904 he led an ethnological expedition to China on behalf of the American Museum of Natural History, New York. Many of the specimens he collected on this trip are still unstudied; that they were once deposited in the vaults of the Museum is shown by Laufer's accession list. After Laufer had left the American Museum the rubbings were presented to him as a gift.² After his death they became the property of Field Museum as part of Laufer's bequest to this institution.

According to Laufer's own words, the rubbings collection comprises 3,336 items which were taken on his 1901-1904 expedition by skilled Chinese workers,³ apparently mostly under his own supervi-¹A short biographical sketch, an almost complete bibliography of Laufer's publications and of writings on him, as well as a survey of his unpublished papers and manuscripts is given in: Kleinere Schriften von Berthold Laufer. Teil 1. Hrsg. v. H. Walravens. Wiesbaden 1976.

²This fact is proved by letters from Clark Wissler (Dec. 22, 1922; Jan. 9, 1923) and Bella Weitzner (Dec. 16, 1925) to Laufer, and Laufer's letter to Wissler (Jan. 4, 1923). It is also stated in a note which precedes Laufer's own inventory of the rubbings collection: "These rubbings were presented to me by the American Museum in 1923 and are contained in a box stored in room 65. They form part, with this catalogue, of my bequest to Field Museum of Natural History."

April 15, 1929 Laufer"

A part of the collection which probably escaped notice is still held by the American Museum (cf. Appendix I).

³In the preface to Lamaistische Kloster-Inschriften aus Peking, Jehol und Singan. Berlin 1914, which he edited together with Otto Franke, he states, "Auf 81 Tafeln sind hier 88 Inschriften nach den Papierabdrücken gegeben, die sämtlich im Jahre 1901 durch berufsmäßige chinesische Handwerker von den Steintafeln hergestellt wurden, auf denen sie eingegraben sind."

sion. Later, more rubbings were added to this collection, such as those of Szechwan tiles from the David C. Graham collection, and the Taiwan rubbings assembled by Dr. M. K. Starr.

Laufer had a very deep interest in rubbings which he considered historical sources of first-rate importance for all aspects of Chinese culture. Moreover, rubbings could easily be taken by skilled craftsmen, were very light, and could easily be shipped. In addition, rubbings usually give more accurate reproductions than photographs. After checking carefully through Laufer's papers I get the impression that he suddenly got the idea of collecting rubbings when he was in China. That at least can be gathered from a letter which Franz Boas, Professor of Anthropology at Columbia University, who initiated the expedition, sent to Laufer on June 24, 1902: "I read with great interest your suggestion in regard to the epigraphy of Peking. I am of course satisfied with any suggestion as to your work that may be most useful for science, as long as it does not conflict with the immediate objects of your journey." The specific purpose of the expedition was to collect objects "illustrative of the industries of modern China," and that explains Boas' limited enthusiasm.

Wherever Laufer went on his expedition he seems to have taken rubbings (see the Index of Proveniences of rubbings in this catalogue). We cannot find much evidence of this in his letters, but they are mentioned in Boas' letters:

"I have not opened yet the box containing your rubbings; but I shall let you know, as soon as it is opened, if they are in good condition" (to Laufer, Jan. 24, 1903).

"I am glad to inform you that your rubbings are all in good condition . . ." (to Laufer, April 13, 1903).

Laufer kept finding interesting objects, and when it was impossible to acquire them, he could at least take rubbings: "I found more than 25 new stone sculptures in relief of the Han Dynasty which were hitherto unknown to Chinese epigraphists as well as to foreign scholars. I have paper rubbings of them . . ." (to Boas, Feb. 10, 1904).

They are again referred to in another letter to Boas, dated Cologne, July 8, 1904, which contains a survey of his rubbings collection:

"In my archaeological inquiries in the province of Shantung I was very forfortunate. I discovered a number of hitherto unknown Mongol inscriptions, new sculptures of the Han period not described by Chinese or foreign archaeologists, procured a mass of rubbings of most valuable inscriptions . . .

From the large mass of rubbings numbering several thousands stand out conspicuously the groups relating to the following subjects:

1) The lamaistic inscriptions of Peking and Jehol, most of them in four languages, afford the means of tracing accurately the last and most splendid phase in the development of Lamaism in China from the 16th to the end of the 18th century.

2) Mohammedan inscriptions. An effort was made to collect as much material as possible bearing on the history of Islam in China. Thus far, I have succeeded in obtaining rubbings from the mosques in following places: Hsian in Shensi with the oldest Mohammedan inscriptions extant (dating from A.D. 742), Honan fu, K'ai fong fu, Peking (all complete), T'ai an fu in Shantung, Hangchow and Canton. The texts are in Chinese as well as Arabic.

3) The Jewish inscriptions referring to the history of the Chinese Jews of K'ai fong fu.

4) Confucian monuments: all portraits of Confucius and his disciples still extant on authentic stone-engravings.

5) Sculptures of the Han Dynasty in Shantung.

6) All historical inscriptions of the Han and Six Dynasties in Shantung and Shensi. A Han inscription from Ili, Turkestan.

7) The inscriptions of the T'ang Dynasty in Hsian and those of the tombs of the T'ang and Ming Dynasties.

8) The Mongol inscriptions in the ancient square character of Shantung; a complete set of the famous inscription in six languages in the gateway of Kü yung kuan.

9) Buddhistic monuments: images of the 18 and 500 Lohan, complete set of the Buddhist canon (tripitaka) incised on stone-tablets in the temple Hsi yü sze. All Buddhistic temples in and around Peking, P'u to shan, Hangchow, and many others.

10) Christian monuments: Jesuit tombs and Catholic churches of Peking. Unique two volumes of rubbings of stone-engravings with representations of Jesuits, in the Palace of Yüan ming yüan now destroyed. Syro-Nestorian inscription."

The rubbings formed the basic material for several of Laufer's articles.⁴ It was his firm intention to make these sources accessible by publishing them in facsimile and translation,⁵ but after the first two portfolios had come off the press World War I made international scholarly co-operation impossible, and the project was left unfinished. When in 1929 there was a discussion about the establishment of an Oriental Research Institute in Washington, D.C.,⁶ the publication and scholarly work on the rubbings was one of the important projects suggested. The brief outline of this undertaking given in a mimeographed paper seems to be written by Laufer himself though it is unsigned. At any rate, it sums up his idea of what should be done with the rubbings collection and is as follows:

"PROJECT OF A CORPUS INSCRIPTIONUM SINICARUM

(Division B of Oriental Research Institute)

1. General Plan.

Publication of facsimile reproductions of approximately 6000 inscriptions of China in 12-15 volumes.

Time required: Fifteen years.

Total approximate cost: $150,000, to be distributed over fifteen years in annual appropriations of $10,000, this sum including cost of reproduction and publication, collecting material, and services of a Chinese assistant.

2. Outline of Plan.

The most precious monuments of China consist of many thousands of inscriptions mostly on large stone tablets, but also on bone, tortoise-shell, bronze vessels, metal mirrors, pottery, sculpture, statuary. As contem-

Chinesisch und Mandschu abgefaßt, geben Kunde von der letzten und glänzendsten Phase der Entwicklung des Lamaismus auf dem Boden Chinas, vom 16. bis zum Ende des 18. Jahrhunderts. Von allen diesen Inschriften habe ich Abklatsche genommen, die sich auf viele hunderte belaufen, ebenso von den großen Lama-tempeln in Jehol im östlichen Chihli, das ich August 1902 besuchte. In ihrer Gesamtheit geben diese sehr umfangreichen epigraphischen Denkmäler ein getreues Spiegelbild der Beziehungen der chinesischen Kaiser zu Tibet und der Mongolei und eine nahezu vollständige Geschichte des Lamaismus. Ich plane, dieselben in Verbindung mit Dr. O. Franke in Berlin herauszugeben und zu übersetzen. -- Auch beschäftigte mich lebhaft . . . die Geschichte des Islams in China, von der uns bisher so wenig bekannt geworden ist. In allen Orten des nördlichen und mittleren China, die ich besucht habe, habe ich die Moscheen durchforscht und Abklatsche der in ihnen vorhandenen Inschriften genommen. Dieselben sind nicht nur in chinesischer Sprache abgefaßt, sondern auch eine große Anzahl auf arabisch. . . . Ich hoffe, daß die vielen hundert Abklatsche mohammedanischer Inschriften, die ich mitgebracht habe, sehr viel zur Aufhellung der Geschichte des Islams in China beitragen werden. Im Verein mit Dr. Enno Littmann, der die arabischen Texte bearbeiten will, habe ich die Veröffentlichung dieses Materiales geplant."

poraneous documents and records of events and customs these inscriptions supplement the official annuals, fill numerous gaps left by these, and contribute a vast amount of information to culture history. The Chinese have always been interested in their inscriptions, and have made epigraphy a science. There is an extensive literature on the subject, of great value, especially on ancient inscriptions, where the identification of archaic forms of script with the modern characters is the favorite subject of investigation.

The Chinese have developed an ingenious system of taking exact facsimiles of inscriptions by means of inked paper rubbings which can be easily reproduced. Taking rubbings of inscriptions is a special profession, as there has always been a great demand for them among scholars and as rubbings are a favorite gift among the learned. Many such rubbings of ancient data are still in existence in the collections of scholars in China, and in some cases the rubbings have outlived the actual inscriptions in stone or metal. A systematic collection of all inscriptions extant in facsimile reproductions has never been attempted in China or Japan. Of European sinologists Chavannes is the only one who has paid attention to epigraphy and who has published, translated and critically annotated a certain number of Chinese inscriptions; but much more remains to be done in this immense field.

While in China on a mission for the American Museum of Natural History of New York in 1901-1904, Dr. Laufer made a collection of 3336 rubbings of monumental inscriptions. These are all properly arranged, classified, and roughly catalogued. For years this collection was housed in the American Museum until the Museum authorities decided to present it to Dr. Laufer, who now holds it, his personal property, in Chicago. This collection would form the nucleus of the proposed Corpus and comprises very important material, a goodly proportion of which is unknown to the Chinese epigraphists.

From this collection the Lamaist inscriptions from the great Lama temples of Peking, Jehol, and Si-nan in four languages (Chinese, Manchu, Tibetan and Mongol) have been published by Otto Franke and B. Laufer on eighty-one plates in photogravure (Berlin, D. Reimer, 1914, two portfolios).

As shown by this instance the inscriptions of China are not restricted in language to Chinese, but there are many in other languages like Manchu, Tibetan, Mongol, also in Si-hsia, Arabic, Turki, and Sanskrit.

3. Division of Work.

- I. Jesuit Tomb Inscriptions (about 124 plates). These are composed in Chinese and Latin and contain succinct biographies of the old Jesuit missionaries who lived in China during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries and who were the pioneer-workers in sinology and in opening China to the knowledge of the West. The inscriptions come from two cemeteries west of Peking, the ground of which was presented to the missionaries by the Manchu emperors. The cemeteries were destroyed by the Boxer rebels in 1900, and, as far as is known, the inscription tablets have now entirely disappeared. Considering the general interest in the history of the Jesuits of China recently revived by Latourette's book, this collection of their tomb inscriptions would make a capital publication in which not only sinologists, but also missionaries and historians would be interested. The material is almost ready for immediate publication.

- II. Mohammedan and Jewish Inscriptions. (about 270). During Dr. Laufer's travels in China he made it a special point to visit all mosques, the history of which is related in their inscriptions written in Chinese and Arabic. These have never attracted the attention of Chinese scholars, but are of great importance to our science. Dr. Laufer believes that he has all the inscriptions of the foremost mosques of Peking, T'ai-an, K'ai-fung, Hang-chou, Canton, Si-ngan, Ch'eng-tu, and other localities. This collection also is ready for publication.
- III. Confucian Inscriptions from Peking, Si-ngan, and K'ü-fu, Confucius's birthplace. This collection will also contain all portraits of Confucius and his disciples engraved in stone tablets.
- IV. Buddhist Inscriptions from all famous Buddhist temples of Peking, Nanking, Su-chou and Hang-chou, Pei-lin, and Si-ngan, and the Buddhist Canon of the Sui dynasty engraved in stone tablets at Si-yü-se; also Buddhist iconography preserved on stone tablets.
- V. Taoist Inscriptions.
- VI. Inscriptions from the Imperial Palaces.
- VII. Historical Inscriptions arranged in the succession of the dynasties.
- VIII. Tomb Inscriptions.
- IX. Autograph Writings of Renowned Calligraphists and Painters.
- X. Archaic Inscriptions on Bone and Tortoise-shell of the Shang Dynasty.
- XI. Inscriptions on Bronze Bells, Bronze Vessels and Implements, and Metal Mirrors.
- XII. Inscriptions on Tiles, Bricks, and Buildings.

There is no doubt that this project will be greeted with enthusiasm by all scholars of China and Japan and that they will gladly place at our disposal rubbings of inscriptions from their collections. A work of this magnitude has never before been conceived in Europe, China, or Japan, and it will place at the disposal of scholars all over the world the most valuable documents which China has to offer. This plan is worthy of the American Council of Learned Societies and should be given the most serious consideration."

GUIDE TO READER

The entries in this catalogue are divided into three sections:

- I. Information on the object from which the rubbing was made.
- II. Information on the rubbing.
- III. References.

The format is as follows:

I. Title: transliteration from the Chinese or other languages; Chinese characters; English explanation in parentheses.

Author/artist. Object (if other than stone tablet). Calligraphic style: calligrapher. Engraver. Provenience. Given date/ (calculated date). Other information on object.

II. Mounting (if not stipulated, the rubbing is understood to be in sheet form); dimensions in centimeters. Museum file number/ ("duplicates"). Other information pertaining to the rubbing.

III. References. See Bibliographic References.

Explanation of format:

I. a) Title: Chinese titles, or titles in other languages, were taken directly from the rubbing, either from the shou-t 'i, or pei-o, in that preference. Where neither appeared on the rubbing, it was taken from reference works or composed by Dr. Tchen, and in either case, placed within brackets.

b) Most of the English renderings of the Chinese or other language titles are not intended to be literal translations, but explanations.

c) Names: Persons are usually referred to by their personal names (ming), if these are not mentioned in the rubbing or cannot be determined, the style (tzu) or literary name (hao) is given. Late Ming and Ch'ing emperors are quoted by their respective reign names. All names were taken either from the rubbings or from reference works.

d) Object: Most of the rubbings in this collection were taken from stone tablets (stelae). The term is therefore omitted. Other objects from which rubbings were made are, of course, listed. It should also be pointed out that many rubbings are from only one part of the object, usually from the inscriptive part.

e) Language: Only languages other than Chinese are listed. Where both another language and Chinese appear on the same rubbing, the abbreviation "Ch." is used to indicate that it is also present. In the case of foreign language inscriptions without titles the beginning of the text is given in transliteration where possible.

f) Calligraphic styles: Only the better known terms are used in the entries. The term shu is omitted for reasons of brevity. The style terms appearing are ku-wen (ancient), chuan (seal), li (clerical), cheng (regular), hsing (running), and ts'ao (cursive). The name of the calligrapher, appearing immediately after the given style, may indicate either the writer of the original manuscript from which the engraving was made, or the writer who copied the original in his own hand. In the case of re-cut objects, there can be several steps between the original manuscript and the final rubbing.

g) Provenience: The term is here used to indicate either the original site of the stone, or the repository. Postal names are used for provinces. For all other places, a slightly modified Wade-Giles romanization (without diaeretics) is used except for well-known cities such as Peking. Where the provenience is unknown, "N.p." is given.

h) Dating: Dates were converted according to the Western calendar. Only the year is given here (in bold type). When only the reign period is known, that alone appears. When only the dynasty is known, the entry is to be found under that dynasty heading, and before the known dates of that dynasty. Calculated or questionable dates are placed in parentheses. If there was no dating information available, the entry was put under the "N.d." heading at the beginning of the catalogue.

II. a) Format: Of the approximately 4,000 rubbings in the Field Museum collection, most are in unmounted sheet form. A small portion is mounted either in scrolls, books, or albums, or simply backed. In such instances, the type of mounting is given.

b) Dimensions (given in centimeters) refer to the actual sheet size, or to the size of the individual parts mounted on the pages of books or albums. The vertical measurement is given first, followed by the horizontal.

c) The file numbers (following the dimensions) appear on both the Field Museum file cards and the rubbings. Numbers marked "d" in parentheses refer to "duplicates." This term is here used to indicate rubbings taken from the same object. Separate entry numbers were only assigned to duplicates when the rubbings were taken many years apart.

d) The abbreviation "Illus." which appears in some entries following the file number indicates that this rubbing is illustrated in this volume.

e) Dating: The date of the rubbing should be distinguished from the date of when the object was cut, and in only rare instances is the exact rubbing date known. Approximate dates given here were determined by the known histories of the collections from which they came.

f) Collector's names: When a rubbing is known to come from a collection other than the Laufer collection, the collector's name is given.

Order of entries: The catalogue entries are arranged in chronological order under dynasty headings. Rubbings which could not be dated are listed under "N.d." at the beginning of the catalogue.

WU LIANG TZ'U

Note: The following rubbings were taken from slabs of the Wu family shrine located in Tzu-yün shan, Chia-hsiang hsien, Shantung. The inscriptions, largely captions, were incised in li-shu, the pictures in low relief. The name of Wu Liang was taken from one member of the family and retained when the entire shrine was excavated in 1786. All rubbings here have been placed under the earliest given date in this collection, A.D. 147, which appeared on a pillar approaching the shrine. Four of these pillar rubbings and two epitaphs of the Wu family are included here with the shrine rubbings.

The Field Museum collection includes three sets acquired by Bertold Laufer when he visited the shrine in 1903. Only one set is considered complete. The 116 series is mounted in scroll form. Later stones pertaining to the Wu family may be found under the Ch'ing dynasty, cat. nos. 1796, 1812, 1813, 1944.

SHALA AND CHENG-FU SZU CEMETERIES

Shala (Cha-la[n] 柵欄) Cemetery, situated just outside P'ing-tse-men 平則門 (Fu-ch'eng-men 阜城門) is the oldest Catholic burial ground in Peking. The land was originally presented to the Jesuits by the Wan-li Emperor in 1610 as a place of entombment for Father Matteo Ricci.¹

In 1654 the Shun-chih Emperor donated another piece of land as a burial ground to Father Adam Schall von Bell. This is confirmed by an inscription erected by Schall in 1666 (see entry 1148) when he had a chapel dedicated to the Holy Virgin built there.² These two parcels of land were joined together in 1708 to become Shala Cemetery.

Another site a few miles beyond Shala was bought by the French Jesuits around 1732 to serve as both a country residence and burial ground.³ This became the second Catholic cemetery, named after the village it was situated near, Cheng-fu szu 正福寺. Repairs upon it occurred in 1777, and again in 1863. During the Boxer uprising, both Shala and Cheng-fu szu were badly damaged.

Apparently the rubbings listed here were made after the 1900 uprisings, and following repairs on the two cemeteries. Inscriptions from the tombstones appear in both Chinese and Latin, with the titles only in Chinese. Border designs on the stones were, in many instances, omitted on the rubbings. Two handwritten maps which accompanied this collection when it was obtained by Dr. Laufer are here reproduced as a key to the location of each stone. These maps pertain only to the rubbings from these cemeteries. Pertinent entries carry references to the numbers given on these maps, i.e., Map ref. 1 in entry 1147. Other maps may be found in Favier (1), 206; Hubrecht (1), 386-387; and Cordier (1), 1029ff. An early description of Shala Cemetery is given in d'Elia (1), II, 618ff.

Regarding the present state of preservation of the cemeteries, the French embassy in Peking reported in 1968: "En 1956, les tombes de ces deux cimetières ont été transférées au lieu dit Hsi-peï-wan, qui se trouve au nord-ouest du Palais d'Été. A l'époque, ces transferts avaient été opérés avec le plus grand soin: mais les stèles ne peuvent être visitées actuellement, car Hsi-peï-wan se trouve dans une zone interdite aux étrangers, et nous n'en possédons pas de photographies."⁴

CH'UN-HUA PI-KO FA-T'IEH

Note. The famous Ch'un-hua Pi-ko fa-t'ieh, a collection of early autographs, was originally edited by WANG CHU, and carved in Ch'un-hua 3rd year (A.D. 992) by order of the Sung Emperor, T'AI-TSUNG. The title is a combination of this reign year name, and the name of the hall, Pi-ko, which served as a repository for these fa-t'iehs carved on wood-blocks. Field Museum's collection is from stone re-cut in 1646. The mo-lo artist (tracer) was FEI CHIA-SHOU. At the time of purchase, the slabs from which these rubbings were taken were stored in the Confucius Temple of Hsi-an. The title entries here follow WANG CHU's original order which later reviewers found to be chronologically incorrect in some instances. References to these criticisms may be found in the Museum card file.

K'UAI-HSÜEH T'ANG FA SHU

Note. According to Emperor CH'IENT-LUNG's K'uai-hsüeh t'ang chi (see below, entry 1722), the original stones were cut from a selected collation of examples of famous autographs. This collection of engraved stones, owned by FENG CH'ÜAN and called Kuai-hsüeh shih-k'o, was later purchased by YANG CHING-SU, Governor of Fukien, and subsequently offered to Emperor Ch'ien-lung. Because of variations in both the size and types of stone used, Emperor Ch'ien-lung ordered the entire collection to be re-cut to standard slabs of stone. This was accomplished ca. 1780. The Field Museum rubbings are from these Imperial Palace re-cuts, referred to as the "Nei-t'a" edition.

The title was partly composed from an example of calligraphy written by WANG HSI-CHIH which began with the first two characters, "K'uai-hsüeh. . ." ("Fair weather after snowing. . ."). Catalogue entries here are in the same order as originally given to these slabs by the palace-editor:
